Middendorf Nominated To OAS Job

President Reagan took some time from his semi-social visit to New York over the weekend to announce a few more appointments, including that of J. William Middendorf II to be the U.S. representative, with ambassadorial status, to the Organization of American States.

It had been assumed that Middendorf, the president of Financial General Bankshares Inc. who headed up the transition team at the Central Intelligence Agency, would get an administration job of some sort. The former ambassador and Navy secretary wanted to be defense secretary, but that didn't work out.
